ON THE MOVIE CHANNEL

Month after month, many of you write to us asking that we show a few of your favorite films. Often on the lists of favorites are films that have long since left the theatres but are still fresh in the minds of movie lovers.

These are the kinds of films—the ones that time can't tarnish—that we're going to be bringing to you under the banner of the "Best of..." movies on The Movie Channel beginning this month.

And each month, we'll serve up a different "Best of..." special, teaming together films similar in theme, or simply the best of their type—whether it's drama, comedy, or something a little more offbeat. You'll be treated to movies that were blockbusters in their day as well as a few films that never received the attention they deserved.

You can be sure that we'll be as selective in picking our "Best of..." films as we are with all our movies. Our team of evaluators has their work cut out for them—researching decades of films for the few deserving of our "Best of..." designation.

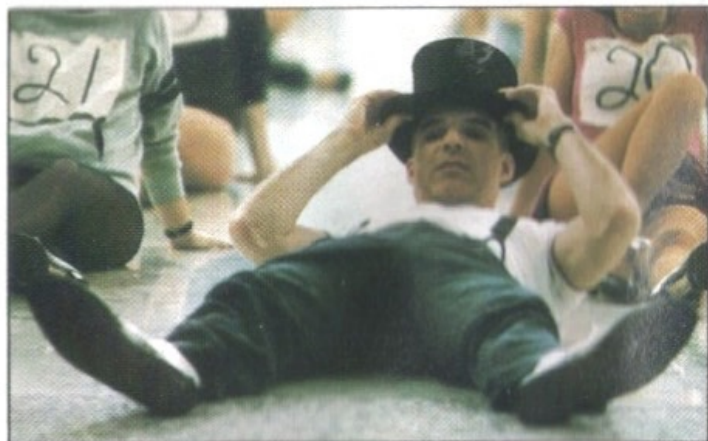

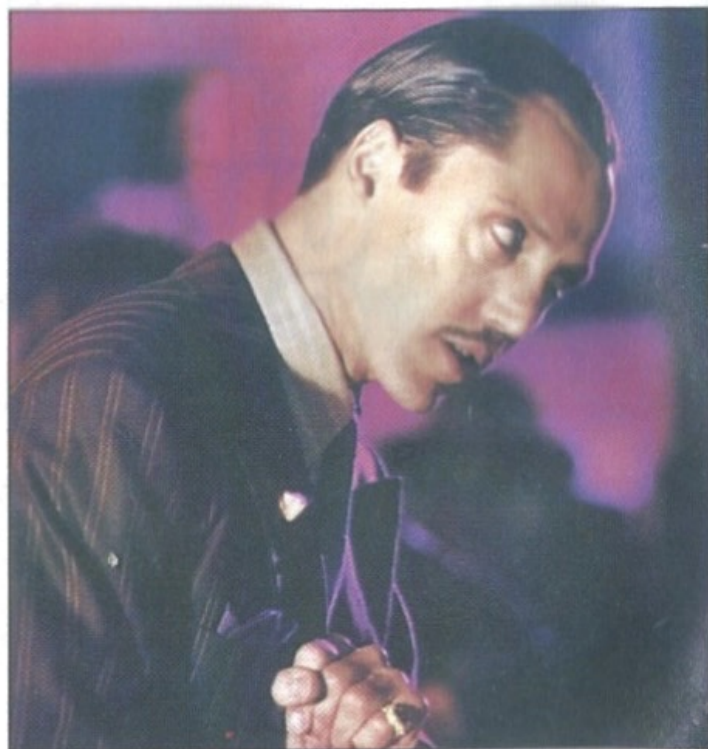

This month, you'll get the first taste of what's in store. Our January special, "Best of... Those Marvelous Musicals" features films spanning four decades filled with song and dance spectacles that have a timeless charm.

Why not write us with your suggestions for upcoming "Best of..." features:

BEHIND THE SCENES

• Outrageousness isn't new to Michael Palin: as a longtime writer-member of Monty Python, he's perpetrated all manner of silly stuff. Time Bandits marked an interesting departure however, for Palin got to turn his acting and writing talents to children as well as adults. Palin feels that kids like some toughness with their fantasy and his wicked sense of humor was happy to oblige. Apparently, some of the inspiration came from Palin's own children, who are usually "somewhat embarrassed by a father who occasionally dresses up in women's clothing. It's difficult to respect." Nonetheless, his 12-year-old son helped Dad write the ad slogan. And what did the proud papa do as a reward? "I slapped him about the head," Palin grins. "And took his money."

• Vice Squad, as the title might imply, is a look at a few nights in the toughest section of Los Angeles, a world of prostitutes, pimps, hustlers, and the cops who must deal with this netherland every day. But it's not glamorized for the movie: it's pretty garish, violent, ugly—and based on the recollections of a cop who knows it firsthand. The task of recreating one of these characters fell to actress Season Hubley, and even though Hubley's cosmopolitan upbringing as the daughter of famous animators bore no relation to these women, it was a life she had begun to investigate for another movie. She tackled it with typical energy, and spent nights on the street watching the hookers and seeing the very real danger. The result: a harsh drama, not for every taste, but one that Hubley said taught her a lot. "I think that's what acting is all about. When you take a part, the whole thing is to expose and make yourself vulnerable because the character is vulnerable. It's just a big pot shot."

• Matt Dillon seemingly has made a career out of playing bullies—he was plucked from high school in suburban New York to play a punk in Over The Edge and then went on to terrorize the kids of My Bodyguard and capture the heart of Kristy McNichol in Little Darlings. But despite Dillon's obvious bubblegum/beefcake appeal there's a tenderness and subtlety that surfaces—and makes him an actor worth watching. In the sleeper Tex his performance is rugged but strangely vulnerable; in this month's Liar's Moon he's a man in love for the first time. It may have something to do with being part of a closeknit family of six with some loving parents... who believe in a high school education. Dillon reports that "My mother says, 'I don't care how many movies you do; whatever you do, you've got to get that diploma.'"

• Mark Lee was 2 when he made his motion picture debut. He'd been acting since he was six and was a noted athlete in rugby and fencing, but nothing really prepared him for the extraordinary experience of Gallipoli where he plays a farm boy who joins the army as a great adventure. Lee learned what it was like to be a soldier—a very young soldier—facing an uncertain future, "I realized these were a different breed of men. They were going into something they had no idea what it was about." For him, it was a turning point, both in terms of the boost it gave his career, and his life. "I realized there was something that I really got from this film that I'd never got from anything before. And it was then that I decided I would have to work hard."

• Craig Wasson plays a young man in Four Friends closely modelled after screenwriter Steve Tesich—an immigrant in the '60s. It's a wonderful part—vibrant and introspective as it chronicles coming of age—that gave Wasson an interesting perspective on growing up no matter what your background. "Symbolically, we were all immigrants in the '60s, wondering where we fit in. I realized though that rather than going out and trying to save some intangible world out there—people that we don't know, people that we haven't met—we need to make the dream live in a circle of people that matter to us. And if we can do that, then we're really saving something." And that's what Craig Wasson—and Four Friends—is really about.

THE MOVIE CHANNEL SUGGESTS...

These movies you may not know about but we think you'll enjoy.

... Gallipoli. Think you don't like foreign films or war pictures? Reconsider. Australia's Gallipoli offers a wonderful story about the friendship of two young men as well as compassionate perspective on a tragic battle during World War I. But it has less to do with an unfamiliar episode in history as it does with some universal themes: it has passion, humor, power that transcends. Like Chariots of Fire and Breaker Morant? Give Gallipoli a try.

... Whose Life Is It Anyway? A question that makes sensational headlines is handled here with tenderness and respect. When a gifted sculptor is suddenly paralyzed, he takes on the medical establishment to determine the course of his life, and death. With humor, passion—and without moving a muscle—Richard Dreyfuss takes you deep inside the doomed man's frustration and fear.
